This is death from starvation, and in all such instances there is no fat found anywhere in the body, the tissues are firm and dense because of the small amount of water they contain, and the digestive tract is contracted to its smallest calibre, and contains no gas. Cell Breathing. Another part of nutrition relates to the supply of oxygen. Cells are minute pieces of protoplasmic substance requiring food for sustenance and oxygen for respiration. These are supplied by blood. Besides performing the common function of maintenance, cells perform special kinds of work, causing metabolism and waste. The latter is carried off by the veins and lymphatics. The myriads of cells composing our bodies are related to one another and form a complete whole through the vascular apparatus and nervous system. There is a demand by the...
