Not illustrated. 1819 Excerpt: . the advantages which the slave-trade with Europeans has for a long time held out; paganism, of course, setting the prohibitions of Islamism at naught. We may, however, anticipate, from the active industry of the priests of that faith, that it will soon be re-established, if measures be not taken to introduce Christianity, by those European states who have already an established-influence in Nigritia. Experience has shewn, that if once Islamism gets fairly into power, a confirmation of barbarism, or something worse, on the inhabitants, becomes universal. The effects of this faith on the minds of its professors and converts, are such, that little hope can be ever entertained of forming commercial connections, which would be protected, or of introducing arts or other means, by which the condition of the people might be improved. A short distance to the eastward of Christiansburg, are Lickie, Tema, and P001263/, small places belonging to the Danes, which are merely held as factories, and are of little value in any point of view. Prampram, where there is a small British post, is one of the most valuable possessions on this coast, as it gives us a claim to that fertile country, and entitles us to erect an establishment on the west bank of the Volta, which is navigable for large vessels, and is of infinite value, from the sources of that stream lying far in the interior. That part of Aquapiem, which is called Adampe, is quite an...
