Excerpt: . chapter V the infants milk depots in great britain In the two preceding chapters we have traced in France and the United States during the last ten years of the nineteenth century the rise and development of special measures for the protection of infant life. In both countries, in the French Consultations de Nourrissons and Gouttes de Lait as in the American milk depots, these measures included the supply, either gratuitously or at reduced prices, of specially prepared infants milk, which in most of the French institutions was supplied subject to the systematic medical supervision of the infants fed upon it. Some years elapsed before the work attracted the attention of public health workers in this country. It is doubtful if anything was known of Mr. Straus's depots until the publication in February, 1905, of my book Infantile Mortality and Infants Milk Depots, in which an account of them is given. In the following summer Mr. Straus described his work in a paper he contributed to the discussion on infant mortality at the annual meeting of the British Medical Association at Leicester. The French methods, however, became known earlier, and, with modifications, were introduced into this country by the St. Helens Corporation on the advice of the Medical Officer of Health, Dr. F. Drew Harris. The attention of Dr. Drew Harris was first directed to the subject by a short leading article that appeared in the Journal of State Medicine of December,...
