Excerpt: . . . but just as Miss Wheeler was about to leave the dining-room, Polly plucked up courage to ask: Mrs. Temple, if you don't mind, could I--may I take up the tray to Mabel You, dear! Aren't you too small to manage that large tray and such a load of good things I'm afraid it will be almost too heavy. Oh, no, it won't; I can do it; please let me; I'd love to! said Polly, all in one eager breath. I'll have it fixed in two minutes, said kind Miss Wheeler. You carry the glass of milk, lest it should spill, and bring your own as well, and you and Mabel shall dine together. You can make believe you are lunching with a friend, and have great fun. And away went Miss Wheeler, who was never at a loss to...
